From double-deckers served in greasy paper bags to patties made from organic, free-range, multilingual cows who spent their final moments gazing at the Pacific Ocean, SF is home to many excellent burgers. We've scoured this city (i.e. eaten our weight in meat sandwiches) looking for the real standouts, so you won't ever waste your time on a mediocre burger again. Here are our favorite places in San Francisco to get a burger.

Gott's is a great burger spot when you're in the mood for fast food, but don't want to sacrifice taste or quality. The California Burger has a fried egg, Cowgirl Creamery's Wagon Wheel cheese, mayo, and bacon that is on the correct side of crisp. It's the perfect lunch spot to hit up after a day eating pluot samples at the Ferry Building farmers market.
